Cloud Evening 2

A journey around the globe following clouds

Language: English/German

When birds travel towards warmer areas of the globe in the winter, they often follow the large wind systems (for example Jet-streams). These wind patters also shape the currents on our coeans. The winds leave their footprint in clouds above the North Atlantic. Clouds can form in all shapes under different scenarios. We will explore answers to questions, look at cloud images from around the globe & conduct a small laboratory experiment. This talk was given three years ago & is updated now.

Some questions we aim to anser are:

==

- o What is the jet-stream?
- o How do clouds form in the atmosphere?
- o Can mountains hold on to clouds?
- o How does a sunrise change the color of our sky?
- o When can we best see a rainbow?
